

Abstract

An overview is presented of current work on the search for biochemical and cytological markers linked to desired agronomic and quality characters for use as selection criteria in breeding work.